Boreyne

The Boreyne is a most fearsome beast, having a barbed tongue, dorsal fin, and the forelegs of a lion and the hind legs of an eagle.
The Basilisk is a native of the province of Cyrenaica and is adorned with a bright white marking on the head like a sort of diadem. For this reason it is called the King of Serpents. Its gaze strikes any living thing dead by petrification. Its venom is likewise lethal, for it is said that once one was killed with a spear by a man on horseback and the infection rising through the spear killed not only the rider but also the horse.
A great teacher, renowned for his skill in hunting and medicine, wisest of the Centaurs, was educated by the gods and became portrayed as a leader of the Romans. Chiron, the wise and said to be born of the union of sun and lunar blood, is the

The Griffon is a winged, four-footed animal with the body of a lion, and the wings and head of an eagle. It has been reported in India, Ethiopia, and the Hyperborean Mountains. A Griffon can carry a man or even a live ox to its nest to feed its young. The horse is its enemy.
The Hippocampus, or Sea-Horse, is a water-going beast.

The Dragon is found in Ethiopia, where it grows to nearly thirty feet in length; however, even larger beasts are found in India. It has a horned head and barbed tongue, a scaly back, two wings resembling those of a bat, four legs armed with eagle-like talons, and a long tail with a point like an arrow.
The Manticore lives in India. It has the face and ears of a man, with grey eyes and a triple row of teeth like a comb. Blood-red in colour, its body resembles a lion, but its tail inflicts stings like a scorpion. Its voice sounds like a pan-pipe combined with a trumpet. Its speed is as great as its appetite for human flesh.
The Mandrake is a plant whose roots grow in human form, male and female. It has many medicinal uses, but let she who digs it stop her ears, for when it is plucked, it shrieks and cries. Such force has this plant that no one can hear it, but at once he must die.
The Sphinx is a creature that has the head and breast of a woman, the body of a lion, and the wings of a great bird. It often appears as a guardian, for she will kill and eat anyone who cannot answer her question.
The Salamander is like a lizard in shape and has a body forth a milky liquid that is intestating to the skin. It is a cold animal that digests in the flame of a fire. It spits a coil of animal that digests in the flame of a fire. It is 13 inches long and can digest in the flame of a fire. It is 13 inches long and can

The Unicorn is a marvelous creature with the body and beard of a goat, the tail of a lion, and the head of a horse, and a pointed, spiraling horn emerging from its forehead. It is pure white in colour, inhabits woodlands, and is exceedingly wild and difficult to capture. This shy beast becomes tame and docile in the presence of a virgin.
